"A Richly Atmospheric Production."

The World Premiere of Motti Lerner's PAULUS has a limited run and must close on December 15th. So what are critics saying? Play the video or read on...

Kerry Reid of Chicago Tribune writes, "Call it The Last Temptation of Paul...a fantasia that combines loose historical context with intense religious debate...the philosophical context of Lerner's show is fascinating."

Tom Williams of ChicagoCritic.com concurs and says, PAULUS "is daring, provocative and enticing work...I found it theatrically appealing...it sure challenges us to think, analyze, and consider the nature and essence of our beliefs."

Hedy Weiss of Chicago Sun-Times adds, PAULUS "is receiving a richly atmospheric production... artfully directed by Jimmy McDermott, the cast is strongly led by Daniel Cantor as the brutally abused Paulus, with Anthony DiNicola as his sweet, Sancho Panza-like attendant."

Michael J. Roberts of Showbiz Chicago agrees, "Director Jimmy McDermott has brought together a first rate cast to tell the story, especially with this leading man, Daniel Cantor who turns in a complex and emotionally riveting performance as Saul."

Lauren Whalen of Chicago Theatre Beat appreciates the design of PAULUS: "Rebecca A. Barrett's lighting is gloriously moody, a perfect match for Peter J. Storms' original score, an innovative blend of traditional Jewish and Christian musical forms and American shapenote singing. Dan Stratton's set and Jesse Gaffney's props incorporate PVC pipe in incredible ways, and Paulus' bright red garb speaks well to costume designer Hiltner."

What does all the praise add up to? As Bonnie McGrath, ChicagoNow, says, "If you've ever wondered what life was like in Judea/Rome after the Resurrection, during the time of Paul's Apostolic journey, you MUST see Silk Road Rising's PAULUS asap! You won't believe how creative and interesting this play is..."
