"Undeniably Smart and Thoughtful"

Critically Acclaimed Play about the Here and Now!

"The Hundred Flowers Project under Joanie Schultz's vigorous direction is a challenging and exciting work, in which a group of young actors working to develop a script about the Chinese Cultural Revolution find themselves engaging in the same destructive group-think as the political figures they seek to portray. Chen has a terrific ear for phony inclusiveness and for dictatorial behavior masquerading as consensus-building, and those political themes give heft and value to what might otherwise have been an exercise in actors' being cleverly self-regarding. Mia Park shines as the power-drunk director, and she's ably supported by the rest of the cast. Michael Stanfill's video and projections design provide the perfect ominous note of nowhere-ness, of ideas and plans and even people disappearing into a rabbit hole of dishonest nonsense. Well worth seeing." -Kelly Kleiman, Dueling Critics

"Undeniably smart and thoughtful" -Kerry Reid, Chicago Tribune
