Audiences Connect Across Boundaries

Dear Friend,

Following the attacks of September 11, 2001, the challenges and fears confronting a devastated American public cried out for conversations that were cross-cultural, transnational, interfaith, and occurring within and between our local communities. We created Silk Road Rising in response to this need.

Our work has taken the form of live theatre productions, video plays, essays, civic engagement projects, school-based education programs, and community building events.

And the impact of our efforts? A more representative and integrated cultural sector -- not one of cultural silos or narrative ghettos, of sequestered communities of "insiders" and "outsiders," but a community characterized by dynamic, evolving, all inclusive cultural interchange. When people and stories connect across boundaries and borders, conflict and distrust subsides.
