The American Theatre Wing asked, "How do theatre-makers and theatre-goers continue the discussion?"

Here's one answer they found: The digital work we offer for both online viewing and for in-person presentations amplifies cultural representation off stage. "Building a library of digital content that stems from work on stage, the themes of multiculturalism, primarily Asian American and Middle Eastern American storytelling, are amplified and distributed to a wider audience online," they noted.

Our Co-founder Jamil Khoury said in their interview, "the idea is to flesh out the themes and the content of the video in an interactive and participatory manner." Learn more >>

We pioneered Video Plays in 2011, and we tour these videos across the region to such spaces as community centers, libraries, classrooms, corporate offices, and boardrooms.

Talking about issues of race, religion, identity, and what it means to be "American" can be difficult. But by designing and viewing these topics through "Creative Conversations," as Jamil said, we can "use stories and art as a way of freeing individuals to come together as a collective and share their thoughts."
