Meet the Qabbanis!

The characters of Mosque Alert introduce themselves in their own words by telling us a bit about who they are.

This week we meet the Qabbanis, a Syrian American Muslim family living in Naperville, Illinois.

The Qabbanis

TAWFIQ

If there's a lucrative deal in the making, I want in on the action.

AMINAH

My philosophy isn't to pair a headscarf with an outfit, no, it's to build an outfit around the headscarf.

SAMAR

I want an egalitarian, feminist, LGBT friendly masjid. A social justice masjid.

FARID

I'm a proud Arab American. But Muslim American? That pistol's loaded.

What are the Qabbani family's thoughts on their Naperville community and the proposed Al Andalus Library and Community Center? Read more HERE >>

Mosque Alert in the Media

Playwright Jamil Khoury was recently on WBEZ Worldview with Jerome McDonnell to discuss Mosque Alert.

"Building a house of worship is supposed to be a fairly unremarkable process," says Jamil. "When it comes to Muslim houses of worship the rules change very dramatically."

The Reviews Are In!

"Mosque Alert, an explosive world premiere, is seen—and felt—from all sides. Jamil Khoury's kickass script [is] exemplary in its civic-minded bridge-building."

Larry Bommer
Stage and Cinema

"Khoury is a romantic and a true believer in the potential for tolerance and understanding. Mosque Alert ultimately is a plea for understanding and compassion that takes aim at the anti-Muslim forces."

Chris Jones
Chicago Tribune

"At any given moment in Jamil Khoury's play Mosque Alert, some in the audience are bound to (silently) applaud the sentiments being spoken while others (just as silently) no doubt are feeling enraged by them. So there you have it: precisely the right recipe for a solid argument play. Democracy (and the First Amendment) in action."
