Searching For Meaning with Playwright Lyra Nalan

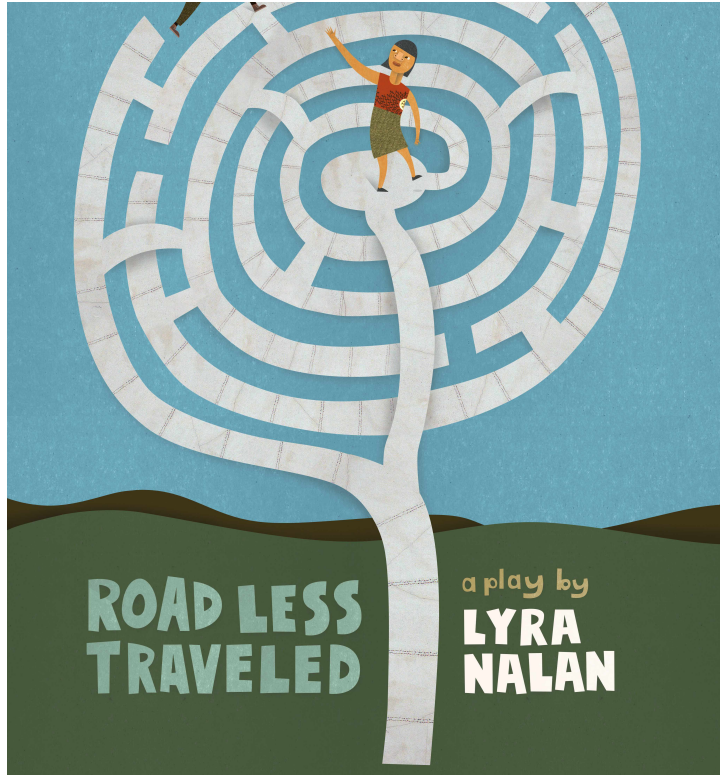

Playwright Lyra Nalan

"Road Less Traveled is a meditation on what it means to choose and to live with what follows. I've come to see it as a reflection on empathy and the human condition: how we search for meaning in the paths we take, and how we try to make peace with ourselves and others. Seeing the play come alive through this workshop and staged reading feels like sharing that search together."

Rebuilding Syria Part 7:
United Syrian Federation

After fourteen years of war, Syrians are pushing for a future that is post-Assad, post-Al Sharaa, post-sectarian, and definitively post-autocracy. In this episode, we lay out a distinctly Syrian path forward: a United Syrian Federation built on federalism, localism, and the right of historic communities to shape their own destinies free of coercion and domination.

The United Syrian Federation explores one of the most contentious and consequential proposals in Syria's reconstruction debate—federalism. It makes the case for a federal Syria in language that is direct and decisive—what it is, what it isn't, and why a robust but accountable central government can coexist alongside genuine regional self-rule.

Pointed, unsentimental, forward-looking. If you care about Syria's future and the difference between unity and uniformity, this episode is for you.
